

As I sit here reading a thin San Francisco Chronicle, I recall a time not so long ago when I delivered one of three heavyweight daily newspapers, all headquartered in San Francisco. The thin, watered down stories that pass for journalism are a sad reminder of consolidation, downsizing, and elimination of competition that have gradually reduced a once rich source of news and education to a trickle.